

Andy Damrow is a senior global financial services executive with more than 25 years of leadership experience spanning property & casualty, life, and accident & health insurance markets across the United States and Asia. Known for operating at the intersection of finance, strategy, and transformation, Andy brings a rare combination of P&L ownership at scale, international market expertise, and a forward-looking approach to AI-led business reinvention.

Andy's career reflects a consistent track record of delivering results in complex, high-stakes environments. He has overseen portfolios encompassing more than $250 billion in assets, driven $700 million in cost savings for a global life insurer, led expense transformation initiatives across $7.7 billion in operating costs at AIG, and delivered 200% year-over-year sales growth as Country Manager for Aetna International in Thailand. His leadership has spanned five countries and some of the most recognized names in global financial services, including GE, Cigna, AIG, Aegon/Transamerica, Ernst & Young, and Accenture.

Currently serving as Senior Sales Director of Financial Services at Accenture, Andy partners with C-suite clients to architect and close enterprise transformation mandates, with a particular focus on AI-led reinvention, financial modeling, and strategic planning. His earlier roles as CFO, Head of FP&A, Country Manager, and COO have given him a multidimensional perspective on enterprise finance — from statutory reporting and capital management to M&A integration and shared-services design.

Andy holds a BBA in Finance with Distinction from the University of Iowa and has completed executive education at the Kellogg School of Management. He is a graduate of GE's prestigious Experienced Financial Leadership Program at Crotonville, a distinction reserved for the company's top finance talent.
